The Swiss driver, who took the European F3 Open title in 2011, becomes a driver managed by Lotus Formula Junior Team, an excellent racing program for young talents with their sights on Formula 1

Switzerland's Alex Fontana, after winning the European F3 Open two years ago with Corbetta Competizioni during driver and team season debut, has joined the Lotus Formula 1 Junior Team, an initiative driven by the Formula 1 team with a clear target: to manage and support young talents in order to reach the maximum level in motorsport.

Alex recently visited the headquarters in Enstone, where is based the Formula 1 team as well, and there he shared experiences with the other drivers in this program. He also visited its various assembly, engineering and aerodynamics departments, titanium and carbon fiber workshops, the wind tunnel and everything else involving the Formula 1 workshop. Physical exams were another important aspect during this week in Enstone for Fontana.

“I'm very proud to have been chosen as the representative of one of the circus's leading teams and this honor gives me great hope for my racing future. What not so long ago seemed a dream is slowly becoming reality: Formula 1 is our objective and step by step we're getting there”. A.F.
